

JUST AN ORDINARY LAWYER. A play, with songs.

Written and performed by Tayo Aluko, with Dennis Nelson, piano

Hofstra University, Long Island, NY. Thursday, March 1, 2018

Greetings, and welcome. By now, many of you will have seen the new Disney Sci-Fi Movie, Black Panther. It is apparently set in a fictional African state that was never colonised, whose people were never enslaved, and who achieved societal and scientific advancement unparalleled elsewhere. Historians of Africa would point to a time centuries ago when this was definitely the case, before Africa's treasures - human and mineral - began to be plundered by Europeans, or credit for her historic achievements claimed by them. That this history will come as a surprise to many is a symptom of the successful appropriation of truth by the colonisers, but we have within us the ability to research the truth, to share it, learn from it, and be inspired by it. In that history are heroic stories of ordinary men and women doing extraordinarily brave things in the fight for the freedom of the children of Africa (and by extension, all humanity), wherever they found themselves on the planet. This play seeks to celebrate some of them, and hopefully to help inspire us, their descendants, both to imagine a brighter future and to shape and create it. The factual history of Queens and women warriors of West Africa that inspired many of the characters and story lines in Black Panther can inspire us in today's struggles. So too can the more recent history of the Black Panther Party here in the US. The conditions that made their existence necessary in the 1960s are still with us, and it is up to us to imagine and create the contemporary response to these conditions, taking inspiration from the collective action that was shown to be so effective in the fictional Wakanda. The liberation struggles in Africa and the Diaspora, whilst they may have been led by some remarkable individuals, would not have succeeded without collective imagination and action. These remain our greatest strengths today: strengths available to us to use - whether it be in the field of law, sports, academia, arts or any other part of our lives - with which we can convert the fiction of a better future into reality. I hope you enjoy the show.
