I wonder how many of you Canadians follow American Football and may have watched the Super Bowl the other week. More memorable than the result of the game was the performance at half time by an artist known as Beyoncé. She surprised millions by bringing politics into her act (probably for the first time ever) with a salute to the Black Panthers and Malcolm X. The Black Lives Matter movement got in on the act by smuggling in posters in support of one of the most recent Black victims of police homicide, Mario Woods. Photographs of the dancers, dressed like Black Panthers, holding this poster have gone viral, though the mainstream media have apparently not deemed it newsworthy. Beyoncé herself has received criticism from many different perspectives - from those objecting to her politicising one of the highlights of the entertainment calendar to those accusing her of trivialising or even disrespecting the memory of Malcolm X and the Black Panthers – real revolutionaries - by the overt sexualisation of her act, which indeed has always been her style, and one of the reasons for her immense success in the entertainment industry. It may be a coincidence that about four years previously, the singer and her equally famous husband, Jay-Z were criticised by the veteran singer and activist Harry Belafonte for neglecting to use their immense appeal and talent to highlight the plight of their people. The old man was not just ignored but rudely dismissed for expressing that opinion, demonstrating the fact that they clearly did not know how important a figure Belafonte was. What chance therefore that they might know who Paul Robeson was, let alone the fact that before Belafonte, before The Black Panthers, and before Malcolm X, there was Paul Robeson. Furthermore, before all the football players on show that day, there was also Robeson, because a century before them, he was achieving national stardom on the football field. Whilst Robeson’s career went hand-in-hand with his political activism almost from its beginning, one should welcome Beyoncé’s late entry to the small fold of artist/activist, and hope that her activism will develop and grow. One hopes that she will also discover Robeson and transmit his name to the wider world with the full respect that he deserves. May she have the humility to learn from her elders as she proceeds along that path, and live out the truth that Robeson spoke and embodied – that Art can be a formidable weapon in defence of all oppressed people.

Tayo Aluko. Writer, Performer. Tayo was born in Nigeria, and now lives in Liverpool. He worked previously as an architect and property developer, with a special but as yet frustrated interest in eco-friendly construction. He has fronted orchestras as baritone soloist in concert halls, and has also performed lead roles in such operas and musicals as Nabucco, Kiss Me Kate and Anything Goes. CALL MR ROBESON has won numerous awards at festivals in the UK and Canada, as well as highly favourable reviews in the press – most notably in the Guardian and on BBC Radio 4. He has toured the play around the UK, the USA, Canada, Jamaica and Nigeria, and at New York’s Carnegie Hall in February 2012 on his 50th birthday. He also delivers a lecture/concert called PAUL ROBESON – THE GIANT, IN A NUTSHELL, and another one titled FROM BLACK AFRICA TO THE WHITE HOUSE: a talk about Black Political Resistance, illustrated with spirituals has been performed in three continents. He researched, wrote and narrated to camera a piece on West African History before the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade, which forms part of the permanent exhibit at Liverpool’s International Slavery Museum. His 15-minute play, HALF MOON, which also deals with ancient Africa has been performed several times in the UK. He recently developed a piece titled WHAT HAPPENS? featuring the writings of African American Langston Hughes, for performance with live jazz accompaniment. He has been published in The Guardian, The Morning Star, NERVE Magazine, Modern Ghana and Searchlight Magazine. He is currently working on a new play.

Pianist Bogdan Dulu (BMus, MMus, DMA) is an active performer, with appearances in concerts, lectures, festivals, radio and TV broadcasts as well as outreach activities on four continents. His recent engagements include a tour of Atlantic Canada (Oct./Nov. 2015), as well as master-classes and lectures at Dalhousie University (Halifax), University of New Brunswick (Fredericton), and Douglas College (New Westminster). He is proud to make his home in Vancouver, BC.

Elaine Joe started playing piano at the tender age of 4. She studied with the Royal Conservatory and played competitively. Since then, she's studied Popular and Blues piano. Throughout her career, she's played with singers, accordion ensembles, choirs and in a band.

Elaine works as a performer, teacher, composer and an accompanist. She plays for four choirs ranging from a mental health choir to a Ukrainian one. As the choirs are rather eclectic, she has an interesting repertoire of Folk, World, Broadway, Jazz and Popular tunes.
